THE REAL THING.
"Stranger—Have you a good hair tonic you can recommend?"
Druggist (Prohibition town).—Here is something that is spoken of very favorably by people who have drunk it.
Willis.—Did they have a good time at your reception last night?
Gillie.—Yes, the guests enjoyed it hugely. All my wife's arrangements went wrong.
A DEPOSED TYRANT.
"I would like to look at some towels, please."
The clerk never moved. He was idly watching the crowd in Bargain Square.
"I asked you to show me some towels," repeated the customer with some impatience.
"Do you want to look at something?" "Why didn't you say so?"
"I did, I—"
"You did not!" stormed the young clerk, as he slammed a pile of linen upon the counter.
"How much are those?"
"Fifty cents."
"Why they are only marked thirty-five."
"What do you know about it?" sneered the salesman.
"Do you think you can come in here and teach us how to run our business?"
"The lady is right," corrected another clerk. "The towels are thirty-five cents."
"Then I will take four," announced a white-haired customer, as she fumbled in her wrist-bag.
"Don't keep me waiting all day for the money," grumbled the man behind the counter, and the woman nervously produced a two dollar bill.
The crowd began to move from other people get near the counter. The youth handed the woman her parcel.
"Where is the change?" she asked.
"There is none coming. You only gave me one dollar forty—even money. Get out of the way and let Bargain Square to the linen counter. But instead of obeying she proceeded to argue about her change.
The clerk grabbed her by the arm, and when she tried to extricate herself he tore her sleeve. The floor-walker wrathfully approached the counter. "See here, young man, if you want to clerk for this firm—"
"Clerk? Oh, yes, I forgot," replied the employee. "Excuse me ladies. You see, I was a street car conductor."
